

Clarence Bartlett House, 1880 Dover Road, Epsom, NH

Stickney Robinson and his brother Joseph bought between 1845-47, the saw and shingle mill of Jeremiah G. Burnham which he built on the privilege formerly belonging to Jeremiah Gordon. The Robinson families settled at Jug City, and in 1852, Stickney bought this property and built the house. The 1991 State Highway survey dated the house as circa 1830, but when the property was bought by Stickney Robinson, there is no mention of any previous structure. When he died, the property was left to his wife, and if not sold, to his sons. His wife Miriam sold the property to Zachariah Leighton in 1870, four years after the death of her husband, as well as selling land to the Epsom Cemetery Association for the Gossville/Hopkinson cemetery. The Leighton's held the property until 1913 when it was sold to the Bartlett family. It remained in this family until sold to the Suncook Bank in 1983, and has been in neglect since that time.
